O'DOUGHERTY PRAISES C.I.A. FOR JOB WELL DONE

CPYRGHT

GRAY: "Now France -- France is the country that wants to neutralize the very area that we're involved in at the moment. How do you react to that partnership?"

KERIN O'DOUGHERTY: "I -- I believe that there's no question that -- that DeGaulle has drifted far to the left and he's advocating unsound policies, but I think he is a man essentially of Gallic logic and reason and can be persuaded to come back and he's not the only man in France. There are other men about to whom argument and persuasion can be used.

"Now in -- in Southeast Asia we've seen a -- a weakness of our position there which is quite clear. It's got -- we've got to back it up strongly. I think the Goldwater administration would do just that."

GRAY: "But how?"

O'DOUGHERTY: "And furthermore we must -- we must strengthen our weapons systems. We must set in force a -- a new -- a new manned bomber display in the air force to supplement the -- instead of this wholesale alliance that McNamara has placed upon missiles, and we also must move as speedily as possible to restore a free government to Cuba.

"Cuba recog -- is in fact a military and strategic salient into the Western Hemisphere threatening our security. In the domestic area the Goldwater program essentially calls for a break on federal expansion."

GRAY: "Mr. O'Dougherty, I -- you'll forgive me but you're moving a bit too rapidly for me. You've just circled the globe in about two and a half minutes and settled all of the problems and I assume that on Sunday you're going to rest! I -- I just don't understand what you've told me. How do we -- how do we release Cuba. Now I've been
